

Northern Cardinal

Sara F.#11

Feb 22,
2008

Introduction

Did you know that the Cardinal lays up to 4-5 eggs at a time? A female sings and when she does that tells the male to bring their food to the nest. The male cardinal protects the nest from other males. The purpose of this is to tell about the Cardinal.

Young

Their eggs are Buffy white with medium brown spots. After the eggs have hatched they are helpless, with very little gray feathers. The male is in charge of the food and the female is in charge of lying on the eggs.

Habitat and Food

They live in shrubs and small trees, forest edges, hedgerows, and suburbs. They are nonmigratory. And they eat bugs, fruit, seeds, and insects.

Description

Male's feathers are red and the females are light brown. Their size is 8-9 inches.

Conclusion

Now that I told you about the Cardinal, you should be able to tell all about the cardinal. In Conclusion, the cardinal is a very pretty bird, but can be very aggressive when it comes to their young, they are a very pretty, fast moving bird. One thing I learned was that the eggs are white with brown spots.

