

Laughing Kooka-

Colleen M.

Feb. 22
2008

Introduction

Have you ever heard of the Laughing Kookaburra? Did you know that when Laughing Kookaburras eat snakes up to 1 meter long they whack it on a branch or drop it from a long distance until it is defeated? Well, when you finish reading this you will have heard of this spectacular bird and you will know both that and a lot more information about Laughing Kookaburras. This amazing bird has about 6 different calls, all meaning something different and it can rarely be seen hunting over water preferring over land. This article is to inform you all about Laughing Kookaburras.

Young

As new lives are being born they are laid as about 2-4 white eggs. Born blind and almost naked these amazing creatures adjust to their new world in about 3 weeks when they can finally see. The parents take rolls in sitting on the eggs for 25-29 days before the hatchlings emerge. The parents also consistently feed the young insects while they stay in the new burrow for a month.

www.naturephoto-ez.com

<http://www.anhs.com.au/images/kookaburra0850.jpg>

Description

The Laughing Kookaburra's colors are gray and brown. And it's size is 17 inches long.

Habitat and Food

The Laughing Kookaburra's homeland is in eastern and north-western Australia where they live there all-year around. They eat meals full of different things such as caterpillars, fish, frogs, insects, small mammals, snakes, worms, and also small birds.

Conclusion

To make a conclusion, I think Laughing Kookaburras are pretty cool. And any day I would love to go to Australia, go on a hike, and find these amazing birds in their natural habitat in the wild. To me the sound Laughing Kookaburras make is pretty crazy... no wonder some genius named them the Laughing Kookaburra!!! One fact I learned is that these birds often live up to 20 years of life.